Student-Led Conferences

We had a strong attendance for the student presentations this week which we hope provided some insight into your child's learning progress. One of the goals of this format is having the child lead the process and thus take some level of ownership of their learning. This always depends on their age/year level therefore teachers worked with each child to prepare the appropriate content and presentation style.

The final phase of the assessment and reporting program at Bell is the end-of-year report which will be created by teachers next term and sent home in week 10 (second last week of school). Regardless of the formal dates for reporting (interviews, conference and written reports), parents/carers can always touch base with their child's teacher throughout the year with negotiated appointment times when necessary.

During term 4, the leadership team will conduct a review of our current reporting stages, formats and processes and will be seeking feedback from parents, students and teachers to find out what's working well and what needs refinement or change. With the introduction of additional features in Compass next year, this is the ideal time to embark on an assessment and reporting review.

Bedtime Stories Challenge

Congratulations to all those who contributed to the Stories Challenge which gave our community the chance to learn from the First Nations People by listening to storytelling with children. In addition to making those important cultural links, we were the top fundraising school for the project. We will soon receive some first nation's artwork as a prize for our collective efforts which we will proudly display in a prominent place around the school.

A huge thank you to Bethia Lord and the team for making it happen and for everyone who joined up. This is another showcase of the strong sense of inclusion within the Bell Community.

Marg Sneddon's Retirement

All those months ago we announced that Marg would be retiring this year after taking some leave in term 4, and now the moment is upon us with Marg's last day at Bell being next Friday. We would love to see lots of parents/carers and community members present for that final assembly where we will acknowledge her huge contribution to Bell Primary, as well as the other schools she has worked at within the state education system.

A Farewell to our Cleaners

Our long-time cleaners, Jordanka and Klime, have also announced their retirement at the end of this term after dedicating nearly 30 years to Bell. Technically, they have been employed by an outside company for many years as part of the DET service model for cleaning for schools, however Jordanka and Klime have always been an integral part of the community. We plan to acknowledge their devotion to the school at the final assembly.

Uniforms in Term 4

Please read the details about the new delivery model for uniforms on the attached flyer from our regular suppliers PSW. As flagged in previous newsletters/bulletins, we have moved to this streamlined system for the following reasons:

- The heavy demands on volunteers and office staff alike to run a retail outlet at a school the size of Bell
- Restricted opening hours and times can be somewhat problematic for time-poor parents/carers
- The PSW outlet and online options can meet the needs of our busy school community.

The launch date for the Bell PS community is confirmed as Wednesday 2 October – the second week of the holidays – for both retail and online.

We have a team of parents who are committed to continuing a second hand uniform service, and the front office will have a supply of hats to purchase for 'SunSmart' emergencies.

Term 4 Events

The weekly specialist timetable will be reviewed next week by the leadership team in light of events and other special programs scheduled throughout the term, such as La Bellissima Festa (school concert), Grade 1 swimming, interschool sport and 2020 prep transition to name a few.

Any changes that effect other regular programs and extra-curricular activities will be communicated to one and all after the term 4 timetable has been finalised early next week. A flexible mindset is essential when planning for the delivery of the many programs and events at a school the size of Bell PS.

COMPASS UPDATE

LATE ARRIVAL or EARLY DEPARTURE

PLEASE DO NOT
ENTER YOUR CHILD INTO COMPASS IF ARRIVING LATE OR LEAVING EARLY.

It is still necessary to call past the office to advise if you have arrived late or are leaving early and admin staff will update this on Compass for you. This will automatically update the teacher's roll. Eventually we are hoping to install a screen in the foyer where you will be required to enter this information yourselves.

From Tuesday 11 June, parents are expected to enter their own child's absence reason – for WHOLE DAY ABSENCE ONLY - directly on Compass. This, in turn, updates the classroom roll automatically. If this does not occur, an SMS will be sent reminding you to update Compass with a reason. If you do not update your child's attendance, this Unexplained Absence will be reflected in your child's Semester Reports.

From Tuesday 11 June, please do not ring or email the school or teacher advising of your child's absence. Please enter this information via the Compass Parent Portal. You can click on the above Compass logo to log in.

Born to Worry

Respond well, rather than react to their anxieties:

Many children are born to worry. The environment they live in may contribute, but worry and anxiousness is in their nature. As a parent of a worrier, and also a born worrier myself, my recent work with Dr. Jodi Richardson to create our Parenting Anxious Kids course has had an added dimension. It's been personal. Fortunately, my young worrier's anxieties didn't prevent her from participating in sport, learning and social activities inside or outside school. She did spend a lot of time fretting and catastrophising about how little everyday things would pan out, almost to the point of making herself sick at times. She was a micro-manager who always made sure she had every angle covered in an unfamiliar situation. If she was to be picked up from a friend's birthday party she'd generally have a back-up plan in case a parent didn't arrive on time. 'Being prepared for every contingency' was one of her main strategies to help her manage her anxieties.

If you are a Type A worrier yourself then you'll understand your child's anxieties. The default reaction in this case is to react sympathetically rather than with empathy towards your child's worries. However if you are the easy-going-she'll-be-right-on-the-day type of personality then it may be hard for you to fathom what all the fuss is about. An attitude of "why worry?" is difficult for an anxious child to swallow. The default reaction is often to ignore your child or let them know they should just get on with things. Neither reaction is what an anxious child should hear. The research that formed the basis of our Parenting Anxious Kids course revealed that parents who respond rather than react to children's anxious moments are far more effective at helping kids manage their anxiousness in the moment.

Responsive parents and teachers:

There's no doubt that anxious children and young people need careful, sensitive handling from families and teachers alike. They also benefit from parents and teachers who respond to their needs rather than simply react to their anxieties. When we are in react mode we become anxious and worried ourselves, such is the contagious nature of anxiety.

Here are three great ways to respond, rather than react, to children's anxieties:

1. Draw your child's attention to the triggers

Many children and young people don't know when they are anxious. Over time help children understand the sorts of incidents and scenarios that lead to their anxiety so that they learn to recognise their anxiety triggers. Encourage kids to stand back and notice their feelings, thinking and reactions to events. When they understand their anxiety they can manage it. When they don't, they feel overwhelmed and consumed by it.

2. Validate their feeling

Empathise, rather than sympathise with your child's feelings of anxiety. "Ah, I get it. You're worried about that test tomorrow. That's understandable." There is nothing better than being understood by a trusted adult when you are genuinely worried about something. You don't have to wallow in it with them, nor should you brush it aside. Letting your child know that you 'get it' is a huge relief when they are overcome by worry.

3. Remind them to breathe

In the moment of anxiety most kids forget to breathe. Their shoulders tense up and their breath tightens, which is fight-flight response to stress at play (we teach this in our Parenting Anxious Kids course). Deep breathing dissipates the fight-flight response and alleviates those awful feelings that come with anxiousness. When your child is stressed remind him or her to breathe. "Let's take 3 deep breaths together." I recommend that your kids practise deep breathing when they aren't stressed so it comes naturally to them when they are overwhelmed.

It's not that worriers and naturally anxious kids can't function well. They generally over-function as they come to grips with their anxieties. But anxious kids can be unhappy kids and can also hard to live with. They can also make difficult partners and friends as adults. This makes childhood the perfect time for parents and teachers to give natural born worriers some tools and strategies to help them live their life in full colour both now and, importantly, in the future.

Michael Grose

You are cordially invited to La Bellissima Festa on Friday 25 October at 5.00pm. La Bellissima Festa welcomes the families of Bell Primary School to an unforgettable evening celebrating Italian culture through the Arts and Sport. Our school performance will he held on the South Oval and we encourage families to bring their own picnic and blanket to sit on. This is an alcohol-free event. Ci vediamo alla festa!

Students should arrive at the event in their costumes (you will receive a class note next week with costume information).

On Friday 6th September, The Grade 6 students visited visited the Museo Italiano in Carlton, as part of their Inquiry looking at Immigration.

The Museo Italiano represents the journey of Italian migrant families to Australia, from the early days of European settlement.
